A Note from the 2013-14 Teacher of the Year

"The future belongs to those who believe in the beauty of their dreams." - Eleanor Roosevelt

All my life I dreamed of being a teacher. I have said often that I looked to my teachers as heroes for they saw something inside of me that was waiting to be unleashed. But in the same breath, I must say that I too saw something inside my teachers that I wanted to discover. There was something about the profession of teachers that has always drawn me in, and now that I call myself "teacher," I find this dream to be better than I could have imagined.

This year has been a dream that I never dared to dream. For this moment in time, I was given a voice and a platform to represent those I cherish dearly. Whether it was throwing out the first pitch at a baseball game, walking in a parade to the cheers of a county, speaking in front of hundreds of teachers who have served this county longer than myself, walking the halls of Annapolis, or modeling lessons to new teachers - I have embraced every opportunity this year has afforded me and treasured each within my heart. Words cannot express the gratitude I have for each person who has supported me this year. You put your belief and trust in me, and you allowed me to soar. This county has given me a gift I can never repay.

Congratulations to the finalists here tonight. The accomplishments of these men and women are something so valued and cherished that few have sat in the seats of these five. They are the teachers that we all strive be - full of ingenuity, passion, enthusiasm, skill, and a touch of magic. I am honored to celebrate each of them, and to pass the torch on to another who will surely have a magical year.
